Quote of the Day

"Democrats cast themselves yesterday (Saturday) as the party that will change the nation's unpopular course -- but hedged on precisely how they would do it.

The Democratic National Committee used a three-day meeting to unveil a six-point statement labeled as the party's vision for governing -- yet it avoided such thorny issues as Iraq or immigration. And party leaders put off further discussion of a Democratic plan for Iraq until later this year -- and then it will be done in private."

-- Knight Ridder reporting on the recent unveiling of the Democrat vision for governing (4/23/06)
